With the recent voting by mail-in ballot, the Kansas Cattlemen's Association welcomes three members who will join the Board of Directors for a three year term.

Paul Acton of Blue Mound, Ronnie Rogers of Cedar Vale, and Ivan Reimer of Meade will join the Kansas Cattlemen's Board of Directors on April 27. Each will bring a unique leadership perspective to KCA.

Reimer brings previous Board experience to the KCA. Not only does he sit on his local school board, but he also served on the first Board of Directors for the KCA. Reimer has experienced the growth of KCA since its inception and will continue to guide its direction into the future.

Rogers, a native of Chautauqua county, has been a long time member of KCA and has extensive experience in various sectors of the cattle industry. Rogers has a family ranching operation and partnership with his wife, children, and brother. Their operation consists of a charolais cow herd, commercial bulls, and a yearling operation where they buy cattle on year round and feed in the feed yards.

Acton's goals for KCA include growing membership and working towards fair trade which is critical to the future of cattle industry.

"KCA has a bright future with these gentlemen joining the Board of Directors. They are three very different men from different backgrounds in the cattle industry. There is no doubt they will bring experience, wisdom, and new ideas to the association, remarked President of the Board, David Pfrang.

As these new Board Members join the KCA leadership, they will be replacing three quality outgoing Board members whose terms have expired. Current President of the Board, David Pfrang, Goff, past Board President Ken Winter, Dodge City, and KCA co-founder Mike Schultz, Brewster will all be leaving the Board; however, all three will continue supporting and being involved with the KCA.

Current returning Board members are Lee Robbins of Yates Center, Daryl Larson of McPherson, Rick Chambers of Hays, Hal Luthi of Madison, and Perry Owens of Minneapolis.
